Demonstrative Pronouns

A Little of This and That

A lesson for the Paideia web-app © Ian W. Scott, 2015

This and That

- Demonstrative pronouns are "this" and "that"
 - Still stand in for some person, place, or thing
- Points specifically to a familiar one
 - Already mentioned in the context
 - Present and visible
 - At least mentally
- As if the speaker is giving a demonstration
 - Pointing to an example

Near Demonstrative Pronoun: This

- Pointing to something nearby
- Familiar endings
 - Stem τουτ- / ταυτ-
 - 1st and 2nd declension
 - Case endings
 - Connecting vowels

Near Demonstrative Pronoun: This

- Nominative forms irregular
 - Initial au missing for masc. and fem.
 - Neuter ends in -o instead of -oν

	masculine	feminine	neuter
nominative	ούτος	αύτη	τουτο

Personal Pronoun vs. Demonstrative

- Similar, but easily distinguished
 - Different stems: αὖτ- vs. τουτ- / ταυτ-
 - Demonstrative has rough breathing (remains of initial au-)

	masculine	feminine	neuter
Demonstrative pronoun	ούτος	αύτη	τουτο
Personal pronoun	αὐτος	αὐτη	αὐτο

Definite Article as Demonstrative Pronoun

- The definite article can act like a demonstrative pronoun
 - Both point out a particular member of the class
 - Infer from context
 - An individual already under discussion
 - An individual observable at hand by the speaker

Ή γυνη ή μου μητηρ.

This woman is my mother.

Keep Learning

- You can learn more about demonstrative pronouns here:
 - Mounce, Basics of Biblical Greek
 - Demonstrative pronouns, 13.1-13.9 (107-109)

Mounce introduces both the near and far demonstrative pronouns together. We're just focusing on the near demonstrative pronoun for the time being.

